FOREWORD

Public and professional interest in population statistics usually reaches a peak during the months following each decennial Census enumeration. Since there has been a steadily increasing demand for a wide variety of information on population changes during the last decade, it is certain that additional data will be welcome at this time when the results of the 1960 Census are still being reviewed. The phenomenal population growth of the past several years, the unparalleled migration that has taken place throughout this country, and the increased interest in land use planning have all been responsible for the unprecedented attention accorded population data.

In the August 1960 edition of the State Planning Department's NEWSLETTER, preliminary population statistics by counties, cities and towns were presented. The favorable response to this publication prompted the decision to prepare a population count based on final Census figures, not only by these categories, but also by election districts and unincorporated communities. Maryland has a large number of unincorporated areas including Dundalk, Wheaton, Silver Spring and Bethesda which are among the ten largest population centers of this type in the United States for which the Bureau of the Census reports enumerations. Furthermore, it was noted that many incorporated municipalities showed relatively small gains in population, although it was obvious that growth had occurred beyond their municipal boundaries. In other neighborhoods communities had enlarged considerably, but no Census figures were available for the community designations commonly in use. Consequently, it was determined that only a population report such as that presented in this publication could provide the information desired by many people.

To further assist the reader, accompanying maps delineating election districts, and indicating the location of both incorporated municipalities and major unincorporated communities is provided.

In presenting these population statistics the Maryland State Planning Department is motivated by its desire to facilitate the orderly development of all the State's resources, including its human resources. Since they are fundamental to sound, accurate planning such statistics should prove invaluable to those engaged in such endeavors.
